

ABSTRACT

An optical waveguide device has a substrate composed of a nonlinear optical material and a periodically domain-inverted structure having the same composition as the nonlinear optical material, where the 5 domain-inverted structure has a refractive index distribution relying on the domain-inverted structure.